RUN NO 14 : Celfyn Thomas/Ken Reardon

Yes - the demon Reardon strikes again! Boet Becker was due to set this one but fell off a horse and bruised his balls! (What were you doing on that horse, Boet?!) Reardon stepped into the breach to assist the Singing Welshman - and there was no doubt that his "style" of trail laying greatly influenced Celfyn in the setting of this run.

A Falsie at the start had the pack back-tracking which was fortunate for Co-Hare Ken who had arrived late as usual. The pack was somewhat bewildered by the scarcity of paper but the feeling of bewilderment soon changed to one of horror when the trail led to the side of a polluted brook with paper clearly laid out on the other side. The adventurous Trevor McWade was the first to (wade) across the stream followed by three quarters of the pack. The remaining cowards chose to run along a tricky section of the bank but eventually had to ford the river - all except for Hugh White, who, fearing cholera, headed back in the general direction of the cars.

The second water hazard of the Christmas run proved to be particularly obnoxious - black evil smelling slime covered the packs' legs and Ken's popularity ran to a new low! (You will recall that he scored a minus 7 for the Umhloti Beach run-in). Nobby Clark who had been victim of Ken's earlier Umhloti run-in decided against crossing the slime and talked John Hudson into running back to the cars with him. Nobby was heard muttering about applying for an interdict restraining Reardon from setting any further runs!

Thereafter, we were treated to a few hundred metres of ankle breaking rock-strewn-pitted ground and ON-ON to the road bridge where Hugh White had picked up paper and was waiting for the rest of the pack. There followed a fairly long run in and thanks to our thoughtful Hares, a wash-down under a tap.

Many thanks to our Hares for their efforts and in particular, for the magnificent Christmas spread which followed - all is forgiven!

HASH TRASH

The booth at the fete bore a sign that read "Kisses - R1,00 to R25,00" A prospective customer asked the sweet young thing in the booth "Is the range in price a matter of duration or perhaps lip pressure?"
"Neither" smiled the girl "lip placement."
